Performance Review

The Ironbark LHP Global Long/Short Fund (Retail) (the 'Fund') returned 2.13% (net) over January.

For the month, over 75% of managers posted gains with all international managers generating profits. From a sector perspective, financials was a standout as tax reform policy and rising interest rates were a positive catalyst. Consumer discretionary was also a meaningful contributor to performance as better-than-expected holiday sales, improving consumer confidence and strong security selection by the Fund's managers led to positive alpha generation in the long portfolio. Energy was a relative underperformer as mid-cap equity performance has not kept up with the recovery in oil prices. Energy is one of the cheapest sectors from a valuation perspective, and the Fund's managers who trade the sector generally believe that it will outperform for the full year, despite the recent performance. Telecommunications, while not a large exposure for the Fund, underperformed relative to the other sectors.

With respect to top contributors at the individual manager level, the top performer, a diversified international equity manager, generated strong alpha in its long book and also benefitted from an overall net exposure tailwind. All regions contributed for this manager. A long beta profile and successful stock selection for the second-best performer, a Europe-focused manager, contributed to a strong month in both longs and shorts. Long positions in information technology, financial services and consumer stocks accounted for most of the gains of the third-top performer, a China specialist.

In terms of detracting managers, the top detractor, a technology-focused manager, suffered from short positions in semiconductors and semiconductor equipment makers, especially as those groups rallied during the month and the manager had significant net short exposure. Poor performance driven by the long portfolio hurt the second-worst performer, an energy specialist, which was weighted toward mid-cap growth exploration and production companies in the Permian Basin (western Texas), compared to short positioning in larger cap names that outperformed. The third-worst performer, an industrials focused manager, generated losses in materials and energy positioning on the long side, despite rising inflation, which would typically benefit these sectors.

The Fund added capital to an existing Europe-focused equity manager based on the investment manager's view on the manager's opportunity set. The Fund fully redeemed from a technology specialist whose performance has not met expectations.

US tax policy changes and continued optimism about the strength of the American economy have continued to move markets higher. This environment has increased the attractiveness of many short candidates, and managers are optimistic about the short sides of their portfolios. New manager additions are expected in the coming months. Late in the month and into the beginning of February, new market concerns arose about inflation, rising interest rates and stretched valuations. The investment manager maintains a robust focus on risk management and continues to monitor the Fund's construction and market risk factors closely.
