Market commentary	The Australian equity market had a soft end to the year, with the S&P/ASX 200 Index (Total Returns) falling 0.1%. Australia outperformed global markets, which were markedly lower due to concerns around a US economic slowdown and continued trade tensions with China. There was a significant fall in bond yields globally, with Australian Government 10-Year yields down 27 basis points, and the Australian Dollar weakened against the US Dollar. Other domestic economic data was generally soft, with Q3 GDP below expectations and further deterioration in house prices. Commodity prices were mixed, with oil notably weaker and iron ore stronger. Looking at performance by sector, Materials (+5%) was strongest, followed by Utilities (+3%) and Health Care (+3%). Communication Services (-5%) was weakest, followed by Information Technology (-4%), Financials (-3%) and Energy (-2%).
Fund commentary	The Fund returned -2.25% (after fees) for the month, underperforming the benchmark by 2.13%. The gearing level of the Fund as at end of December was 47.8%. Our overweight holding in QBE Insurance (-11%) was a significant negative contributor to performance. The company provided an update on its 2019 reinsurance program and longer-term cost targets that disappointed the market. Weak share price performance also reflects the sharp drop in bond yields, which reduces investment earnings. Our overweight position in Incitec Pivot (-13%) detracted. The stock underperformed due to investor concerns around the falling oil price, compounded by seasonal weakness in fertiliser prices. Global fertiliser prices have pulled back from recent highs, which we believe is driven by the usual seasonal lull in demand experienced between November and February. Longer term fundamentals remain positive for fertiliser prices as the supply-demand dynamics are expected to tighten in coming years. Our decision not to hold CSL (+4%) also contributed negatively. Our materials holdings were significant positive contributors to performance, including overweight positions in BHP Billiton (+12%) and Rio Tinto (+7%). In the case of BHP, the company undertook a major capital management initiative during the month and both of the miners have benefited from favourable outlooks for key commodities. Our overweight holding in Fletcher Building (+4%) outperformed. The stock recovered some underperformance from the prior month, with the market's response to management's downgrading of earnings in November now looking something of an overreaction. The stock was further supported by the announced sale of its Formica business unit, with the company achieving a good price in difficult equity market conditions. Our decisions not to hold a number of growth/yield stocks that underperformed during the month were also supportive. The key names were Macquarie Group (-5%), Aristocrat Leisure (-7%) and Unibail-Rodamco-Westfield (-10%).
