Market commentary	The Australian equity market recorded its worst performance in more than three years, with the S&P/ASX 200 Index (Total Returns) falling 6.05%. Poor performance mirrored global markets, with a broad-based sell-off triggered by rising US bond yields. Local economic data was also generally weaker, with third quarter inflation below expectations, house prices falling further and building approvals and new car sales declining. In contrast to the US, Australian Government bond yields fell modestly and the Australian Dollar softened against the US Dollar. Commodity prices were mixed, with oil notably weaker and iron ore stronger. Looking at performance by sector, A-REITs (-3%) held up best, followed by Utilities (-4%), Consumer Staples (-5%) and Industrials (-5%). Information Technology (-11%) was the worst performer, followed by Energy (-10%) and Consumer Discretionary (-8%). Financials (-6%) fell broadly in line with the market.

Fund commentary	The Fund returned -5.58% (after fees) for the month, outperforming the benchmark by 0.47%. Whilst we are never pleased to see negative returns, we are heartened that our disciplined approach to value investing has generated outperformance in these trying market conditions, notwithstanding a challenging month for some key resource names. We have long believed that rising global interest rates would tend to favour our portfolio positioning and the evidence of the last month supports this view. Generally speaking, the more value-oriented names trading on lower multiples held up relatively well. Many of these stocks, including QBE Insurance (+2%) and Coca-Cola Amatil (+2%), are held by the portfolio and overweight positions in such stocks was the key driver of our outperformance for the month. Conversely, a number of well-owned growth stocks trading on high multiples came under pressure. The key names included Treasury Wine Estates (-14%), Xero (-19%), Cochlear (-12%) and Seek (-14%). Unsurprisingly, these stocks are not held by the portfolio and hence contributed positively to performance. Stocks such as these tend to be disproportionately impacted by rising interest rates due to the long-dated nature of their earnings. We continue to view this cohort of stocks to be over-valued and expect performance for such stocks to be challenged, particularly if global rates continue to rise, and are well positioned to benefit from this eventuality. Our resource holdings were mixed, but overall detracted from performance for the month. Overweight positions in energy stocks including Origin Energy (-12%) and Woodside Petroleum (-10%) contributed negatively. Both stocks were impacted by a near 10% decline in the oil price and Origin Energy came under further pressure due to mounting regulatory risks in the domestic electricity market. In contrast, overweight positions in mining stocks were broadly neutral for performance. Our overweight holding in AMP (-23%) was another notable detractor. The stock underperformed heavily following the announced divestment of its wealth protection and mature businesses to Resolution Life, with the market taking the view that the $3.3bn sale price notably undervalued the assets and left many unanswered questions as to how the resultant earnings "hole" would be mitigated.
